

Living Well Luncheon

The board of advisors at A.G. Rhodes Health and Rehab, one of Atlanta's oldest nonprofits, recently hosted the Living Well Luncheon at 103 West in at Buckhead. A.G. Rhodes operates three nursing homes in metro Atlanta – Atlanta, Wesley Woods and east Cobb County. About 185 people attended. Proceeds from the luncheon supported the Rhodes to Home program, an innovative and rehabilitative initiative which offers a bridge between hospitalization and home. Above left, members of the A.G. Rhodes board of advisors include, front row from left, Karen Brown, Kinsey Harper, Robert Mays, Isobel Mills, Robin Parker and Joanne Laird. Back row from left, Stephen Yarbrough, Elizabeth Verner, Joni Towles, Sue Mobley, Martha Pentecost, Ann Pearce, Ann Barrett, Natalie Chase and Maureen Foley. Above right, from left, Brad Courts and Richard Courts II.

Special / Mary Olsen

Right, from left, Isobel Mills, Bill Parker Jr., Jennifer Cochran and Nuala Johnson. Parker's family sponsored the event and Mills, his daughter, is a member of A.G. Rhodes' board of advisors. Far right, from left, Martha Pentecost, Margaret Denny and David Perdue, chairman of A.G. Rhodes' board of trustees. Denny and Perdue are the great-great-grandchildren of Amos Giles Rhodes, for whom the company is named, and Pentecost is an honorary member of its board of advisors.

Joe Arnold, left, and Kirby Thompson, right, senior vice presidents of event sponsor SunTrust Bank, with Roseanne Thompson, whose mother is a resident at one of the A.G. Rhodes homes.

From left, Carol Young, Mary Munday Tyrone and Mariea Sibley.

From left, Fay Pearce and Ann Pearce, president of the A.G. Rhodes board.

From left, John Foley, board member Maureen Foley, Anne Bryan and Clare Callard.